“ A poem to my Dad: So long farewell I bid adieu to you are the word from a movie I once knew, are the word I say to you. To plant a seed and watch it grow to someone you didnt get to know. I received water and food, nuturing from those around me..But from the person that was suppose to tend for me nothing..I am thankful for the seed that made me. Know that I have grown into a tree with solid roots you will never get to see change with the seasons. Hopefully now that you are gone your tears from above will help me go on from season to season..To the man that gave me life..your daughter Cynthia

To the child that never got to know her father because you were taken away from his life and never got to know the person that would have been there for showing you love. He was the kind of man that if he had, you had or would find a way to help anyone especially family. You still have family who will tell you how your dad was because he taught them to show love not shade.
