“ To my friend Monisa and the Gordon Family. My heart goes out to you all and my prayers go up. God will continue to hold you close. Trust in him and know he is the truth and the light. He will see you through. Below is a poem I felt inspired to write for Marcus. I think if he could tell you anything about his journey home, this is what he would say.

I LAY MY BURDENS DOWN...

I lay my burdens down and look up to his crown, no more tears, no more frowns. I reach out for his hand as he guides me up, filled with so much of his glory and filled with so much of his love. He pulls me near and holds me close and removes all the ailments that troubled me so. He leads me to pastures so green and so bright; I can see his magnificent power, without using my sight.

I lay my burdens down and walk in streets made of gold; finally I say to myself, I've found rest for my soul. The pain I once had, I have no more... The tears I once shed are now tears of joy. I am able to be free; free to be me. Gone are the chains that once bound me. The shackles have been lifted and now I can dance, giving him all the glory and honor, for he has the master plan.

So don't cry for me, for I've done all that I was supposed to do, think of me when you see the morning dew. Think of me when the sun rises and falls. Think of me when you feel like you given your all. I'll be the melody in midnight, the voice in blue, the calm in your storm, the whisper that holds you. Look over your shoulder; I'll always be there; for I have laid my burdens down so you will have none to bear.

“ I remember back in the days running into Marcus Up Top. I was copping a Dapper Dan Bally velour from Mart 125th and Marcus had copped a bulky Gucci jacket (you know the ones with the puffy logo).

Later on that night we ran into each other again back in BPT. You couldn't tell us that we weren't the flyest cats in the club with our hollow gold Gucci links and exclusive Dapper Dan outfits.

R.I.P my dude you will be missed
